

Dear Colleague,

Entrepreneurs are the stimulus package.
Community colleges are the economic stimulus connection point.

Bold statements – but true. Consider the following:

Small Businesses are going to be a critical part of the economic recovery program that is being put in place now. People everywhere are looking for ways to put themselves and their families into a better situation than they are in today.

There has been a recent and dramatic increase in community college enrollment as thousands of individuals seek to improve their situation through education and workforce development programs offered by Community Colleges everywhere. An increasing number of individuals are looking to start their own businesses. Community colleges nationwide have been positioning themselves as leaders in this regard by adding entrepreneurship educational programs.

The National Association for Community College Entrepreneurship (NACCE) serves to support this effort by providing access to resources and information that help these important community institutions offer the best programs possible. NACCE is where the Community College leadership nationwide looks to for direction, resources, information and focus.

Partnering with NACCE allows your company or organization to be at the forefront of this important movement.

I invite you to partner with us, support our efforts, and promote your organization through NACCE to community colleges across the country. We look forward to working with you!

Regards,

Heather Van Sickle
Executive Director

About Entrepreneurship Education at Community Colleges:

The U.S. has 1,195 public, private and tribal community colleges and 11.5 million students are enrolled in these schools. These students represent 46 % of all U.S. undergraduates and 41% of first-time freshmen.¹

The field of entrepreneurship education first emerged in the 1970s, with the first courses at community colleges starting in the early 70's.

Entrepreneurship education programs at community colleges have two student types: students enrolled in the formal education system and the "out of school" potential and existing business owners.
